Homework and exams made easy:

How to support children's learning at home?

Strand IV: Fostering Home-school Co-operation and Communication

Introduction

It is the hope of every parent that their children put good efforts and make continuous strides in learning. To consolidate what children learn in school, home learning with parental support is the key. This activity helps parents understand the importance of creating a suitable home learning environment, and encourages them to assist children in self-directed learning, completing assignments and preparing for exams by employing skills such as giving guidance, using visual and gesture prompts, and playing games.
